The Basic Rule of the Divine Game of Daily Living —

You have the total free will to do whatever you feel like doing in a given situation. The result of your action is has never been in your control — it is God's will. Also your apparent free will is based on two conditions — your genes plus your conditioning — which have been implanted in your body-mind organism by the Source or God.

And yet you are responsible to the society in which you live. The society judges the result of your action as 'good' or 'bad' according to social regulations and legal provisions, and awards you reward or punishment. Reward means pleasure in the moment, punishment means pain, which you are forced to accept. You are forced to live your life in the circumstances in which you have been placed, accepting the pleasure or pain awarded to you by the society from time to time.

Unfair? May be but that is the basic rule of the divine game of daily living. And yet the human being seeks 'happiness' in daily living.

The only 'happiness' the human being can hope to have is the absence of suffering caused by blaming and condemning anyone for anything — yourself or the other: hatred for yourself and hatred for the other. Absence of this suffering means peace of mind: happiness through peace of mind — Sukha-Shanti
